Cookies Policy

Overview This policy describes browser storage and third-party scheduling or hosting technologies relevant to cropurbanis.com. Essential storage The site records the cookie-choice state in browser local storage under cu_cookie_consent when local storage is available. The value is granted or denied. The current source sets no fixed expiry; it remains until you or your browser removes it. This preference supports the site’s consent interface and does not create a Platform account. Analytics The current source does not ship Google Analytics 4 or an analytics-provider loader. It includes an optional runtime hook for Plausible only if that function is present. Optional analytics or another non-essential tracker must be consent-managed and documented before it is enabled. Public forms The public form is sent to Web3Forms and has no file-upload field. Form processing is not presented as a cookie or analytics function. Do not submit confidential project information through public forms. Calendly The contact page offers an optional Calendly scheduler. Calendly content and its cookies load only after you choose to open the scheduler. Booking data is handled by Calendly under its own notices and controls; the public contact form does not send its submission to Calendly. Controls and withdrawal You can accept or decline optional analytics, reopen the preferences control from the footer, clear the cu_cookie_consent local-storage entry, or use browser controls. Calendly provides its own controls for its booking experience. Providers and retention Cloudflare Pages may process technical request data while serving static site assets. Web3Forms processes and forwards public-form submissions. Calendly processes booking interactions when used. Each provider’s current notice applies to its service. This page does not state a fixed provider-retention period. Updates and contact If the site adds a tracker, embedded-media provider or another third-party technology, its source, consent behaviour and this policy must be reviewed before release.
